Amenity Spaces are indoor or outdoor spaces that are communal and are used for recreational or social activities.

RESIMERCIAL: Blurring the Lines Between Home and Work

As the lines continue to blur between live, work and play, there has been an increased desire to incorporate amenities traditionally seen in residential buildings into office spaces. Many of today's office buildings include amenities more commonly found in a residential setting. Break rooms mimic high-end home kitchens, while employee lounges and "family rooms" – rather than formal board rooms – serve as the ideal setting for breakaway sessions to collaborate or work privately. Similarly, game rooms, complete with ping pong tables, video gaming and golf simulators; rooftop terraces; fitness centers; and even nap rooms provide employees a place to recharge during the workday. As most of the workforce is connected 24/7 and workdays are no longer restricted to 9-to-5, employers continuously seek ways to attract and retain top talent.
